PARADE PRANKS

THE PARADE...

"Oh, I'm lost!" cried Yakky Doodle. "I've wandered too far into the forest!"

"Then your luck must be as bad as mine," sighed a small squirrel, who was gathering acorns under the big oak tree.

"It wasn't bad luck as much as it was carelessness," Yakky replied. "I forgot to watch where I was going. That's one of my very worst habits."

"By the way, I'm Sorrowful Squirrel," the stranger replied sadly. "I'm called that because I have the worst luck of anyone in the forest and I never smile."

"Hello! I'm Yakky Doodle," Yakky smiled. "Oh, I am sure there are others with worse luck than you. What about me? I'm lost in your forest and can't find the river so I will know the way back to my pond."

"I'll take you to the river," Sorrowful offered, "if you'll promise that you will try to cheer me up on the way."

"I'll do my best," agreed Yakky. "I can sing, and dance, and tell funny stories."

So off they went. Yakky was singing his funniest song, but Sorrowful just watched, without a smile on his face.

As they were walking under a tall tree, a nut fell and hit Yakky on the head.

"Ouch," he exclaimed.

Soon after that, Yakky stubbed his toe on a large rock.

"Ooooh," he cried, sitting down and rubbing his foot. "That hurt. I guess I didn't watch where I was going."

After a bit, they started their journey again, and soon they came to a bridge which crossed a winding river.

"Say, I know where I am now!" exclaimed Yakky Doodle. "I crossed that bridge on my way into the forest. How can I thank you for showing me the way?"

"If you could have made me laugh just one time, I'd have been so happy," Sorrowful replied. "You needn't thank me for anything, but I do thank you for trying to cheer me up. I knew it wouldn't work, though."

Yakky Doodle started to cross the bridge. He turned to wave again to his new friend; but he did not watch where he was going, and he walked right off the bridge.

SPLASH! Yakky fell into the water. He came up sputtering and immediately swam for shore. When he reached the bank, Sorrowful was waiting for him.

"Did you see what I did?" Yakky grinned. "I wasn't watching where I was going."

As Yakky stepped ashore, he again did not watch where he was going, and he slipped on the muddy bank. He fell head-first into a large mud puddle; and when he stood up, his feathers were dripping with mud.

At the sight of Yakky, covered with mud, a small grin began to form at the corners of Sorrowful's mouth. Then he chuckled, and finally he began to laugh.

"Do I look that funny?" Yakky laughed.

"Ho, ho, ho," Sorrowful laughed. "This is just too much. First you were lost, then the nut fell on your head, then you stubbed your toe, and now look at you! I thought no one in the world could have as much bad luck as I do, but you proved I was wrong. Things are not so bad after all."

"That's what I was trying to tell you," Yakky replied. "Maybe now that you've had one good laugh, you'll have better luck."

"I'm sure I will," Sorrowful smiled. "Your bad luck of getting lost was my good luck. I found a friend who showed me how to laugh at his own misfortune. From now on, I'm going to try to laugh at mine."
